Colombian Mines Signs Definitive Option Agreement for Cerro de Cobre (Gachala) Property

Vancouver, British Columbia, April 16, 2008 (TSX Venture: CMJ) – Colombian Mines Corporation (“the Company”) is pleased to announce that its Colombian subsidiary has signed a definitive option agreement for the Cerro de Cobre Property (which is also known as the Gachala Property) as discussed in the Company’s Prospectus dated March 14, 2008.

About Cerro de Cobre

First referenced in geological literature in 1924, Cerro de Cobre is a copper bearing breccia replacement occurring near the crest of a large anticline in folded and faulted Devonian to Cretaceous age sediments. Data from published historical sources (circa 1945) indicate that the main zone of mineralization at Cerro de Cobre is up to 10 meters wide and contains up to 3.36% copper. Limited preliminary prospecting work performed by the Company during its due diligence investigation, found additional parallel mineralized structures and apparent extensions of mineralization which indicate a potential strike length of over 500 meters. Results of the Company’s due diligence sampling have returned values ranging from 0.73% to 6.74% copper in outcrop of the main Cerro de Cobre zone and its apparent extensions.
